Map reference: Broadbents No 229(Mornington Peninsular)

Approximate distance: 25 miles(40Km)

An overnight coast walk, An unusual walk for the club, it is not intended to be a "24 hr walk", but it is important to keep the pack as light as possible to avoid being slowed down unduly in the sandy areas, so no tents but as it is summer, a sleeping bag could be carried for Saturday night's fireside rest.

About 17 miles of the walk will be done on Saturday, from Portsea Ocean Beach going mostly inland from the beach, to Cape Schank. Late Saturday evening we will stop at Bushranger Bay for a few hours rest. Water is available here, and supper and breakfast can be cooked.

On Sunday morning we will go overland to Flinders about 10 miles further; this part of the walk will have no sand underfoot. There will be ample time at the end of the walk for swimming at Flinders before we go back to Melhourne.

Take a full water bottle - we will be able to pick up water at various coastal resorts on Saturday.

Take 5 meals → Saturdays supper and Sundays breakfast can be cooked as we will be resting then.

Take a torch also. There are no roads to follow for the entire 25 miles. See me in the clubroom for further details.

Transport: Van from Batman Ave. at 6.30pm Fare $8.00

Expected time of return: 10.00pm

Map reference: FCV Mt. Buller 2 inches to 1 mile

Approximate distance: 15 miles

Have you ever looked across the Bluff towards Mt. Buller and wanted to walk along the ridge between Buller and Timbertop? If so then the walk is your chance to do just that. We will start by climbing the Mirimbah spur, a route not previously used by the club, to bring us to the summit of Mt. Buller. The spur rises steeply for almost 4000 ft. with a little scrub at the start and no track, however the views across to Mt. Stirling and beyond should offer compensation for the effort. Energetic souls may care for a side trip to Little Buller. We will continue down over Round Hill and Timbertop to make around 5000ft. of climbing for the weekend.

STRAVINSKY - LES NOCES present

Do you feel worn out in winter and wish to get away-from-it-all? Then follow the example of seven guys and seven dolls who gave their cars a kick in the tyres and boarded Gronows trusty green Chariot on Friday night, 22nd August for Georges walk in the Elphinstone -- MT. Franklin area. Warmly fortified by the usual greasy grub mixture of tamburgers, fish and chips and coffee at Kyneton, it was with slight misgivings about our own sanity that we followed the leader from the van in drizzling rain and watched the theerful followed the leader from the van in drizzling rain and watched the cheerful lights as it disappeared in the darkness, and we erected tents and bedded down as quickly as possible beside a quiet side road.

A dawn carrolling of magpie song — have you noticed how the white backed magpie, found north of the Divide, sings more joyously than his black backed relatives in the south? Probably life is happier on the morning side of the mountain — or it could have been the group of multi-coloured tents that had mushroomed during the night suggested to him that a better race had landed from space, when strange gnome—like figures emerged. Then one of the figures spoke: "I've been sleeping on a rabbit hole full of water! "Same old grumbling humans" thought the magpie, and flew away. A quick breakfast, damp tents packed, George and Shirley donating hot water to lazy types who don't carry choofers, and we started off through a misty and bracing morning, to lightly timbered hills with bushes of pink and white wax-flowers in bloom. A day of enjoyable walking with pleasant company, gay laughter, lunch in the sun and then a walk along a ringe overlooking the old mining district of Fryerstown, no longer noted for gold, but the road we followed was bordered by gloriously flowering golden wattle, filling the air with fragrance.

Our campsite was among gum trees by the Loddon River, very high and muddy and a pump with twin jets of refreshing spa-water. A scots lassie was not impressed with its flavour and declared she "wouldna pay to take the waters here!" I don't know why, there was gallons of it, and all for free. With a cheerful fire blazing and billies steaming, we settled down to a gournet meal — a sort of spa-tasting evening. Beginning with cup-a-spa soup, followed by spa-stew, pronounced delicious, and finished off with express-spa coffee. With wet socks, sleeping bags and clothing dried out, a happy glow enveloped us and a huge silver moon peeping over the hill found our little group agreeing that this was the best part of weekend camping.

A comfortable night and satisfying breakfast with spa-tea, and we were off and up the hill, and along forestry tracks - lunch by a pretty creek with silver wattle blooming. Vyrall was nervoledly wondering about crossing the river and would she have to travel home wet to the waist; but George, with the precision of judgement that has made him famous, led his party to where a huge old log had fallen across the stream and no worries.

The last stage was climbing Mt. Franklin by the keen types and a comfortable trip back to the city, all feeling happily refreshed thanks to our conside ate leader.

Letter to the Editor:

I recently attended a 3 day conference (Radical Environmental Education Conference) held at Melbourne University. The aim of the conference was to discuss(and if possible act on) ways of educating people in environmental issues. Following an introductory session, delegates organised themselves into discussion gruops by way of the Contact system — anyone interested in exploring a paticular topic placed a notice on the Contact board and other people of like mind attended at the designated time and place. Thus the conference was relatively unstructured and informal.

Quite a few of the discussion groups focussed on ways of educating children in the schools(there were many teachers present) while others talked about the use of media, the setting up of communication networks, the education of the "man in the street" etc.

I remember becoming demoralised at what I saw as a general inability to get down to practicalities, almost a sense that many of the participants were slightly out of touch with what really goes on in the world. There was considerable difficulty in achieving a realization that many small groups professing an environmental interest were quite fragmented from one another, with an apparent mistrust of any attempt to set up a formal communication network which all groups could plug into. (People thought that bushwalking clubs weren't really interested in environmental issues for example)

Some of the same misgivings arise when I read our own conservation supplement in "News" — especially do I wonder whether we have given due consideration to the "facts of life" as they are now and as they are projected to be. Perhaps I am just lacking facts and figures, but is it really feasible to stop all grazing in the high country(is there going to be enough land elsewhere), is it truly possible to avoid logging in all major bushwalking areas (won't the demand for wood be too great), and who is going to listen to bushwalkers anyway, when they seem to be demanding a major say in so many areas of production. (mining, grazing, logging etc)

I would like to sea some evidence that our policies are factually possible, given current and future consumption rates. If they are not, I would like to see how we are going to bring about the drastic changes in peoples lives which the alternatives imply.

This letter has not been very constructive, but I felt it was worth getting some of my doubts out into the open. I commend the efforts of the conservation group and I am on their side, but I am becoming somewhat concerned about the various things conservationists say which seem to imply an insidious myopia and a failure to come to grips with the hard realities of power and position.

WHAT SOME PEOPLE GET UP TO:-

For warding off creeping cold when deeply esconced in snow caves the Yeti, Commander Garitub and the St. Albans Kid, devised the following recipe for the delection and general warming of the company.

Take 1 bottle of white Jamacian rum, a good supply of lemon refresh and sufficient hot water to cause condensation on Yeti's contact lenses. Stir intimately (works much better when Yetiesses or fair snow bunnies are present) and serve at once.

Thanks to the Orienteering Newsletter.

Q: Why did the Trish attempt to climb Mt. Everest fail?

A: They ran out of scaffolding.

DANNY FLYNN SETS RECORD - AFTER 7 YEARS

(Reprint from SKI, sept 75 - magazine of the Victorian Ski Association)

Danny Flynn has established a record for the solo run which killed Charlie Derrick in 1965 - Mountain Creek to Hotham Heights in winter.

Danny completed the distance of 52 Km. (about 30 miles) in 10hours, 15 minutes on Sunday August 31, only days before the 10th anniversary of Charlie Derrick's death. Charlie had been trying to establish a time for the distance in 1965 when he was caught by bad weather and died from hypothermia at the top of Mt. Loch, only an easy downhill run from Hotham Heights.

Danny Flynn had been training 7 years for last months record attempt. He had a previous crack at it, but failed to find the perfect combination of weather, snow conditions and personal fitness. On the morning of his successful run, he left Mountain Creek at 7am (after sleeping in) and arrived at Hotham Heights at 5.15pm after travelling alone all the way on cross-country skis and on foot, with only lightweight emergency gear. Included in his pack was a complete change of underwear and socks, as he had to swim the Big River en route.

The worst part of the run was the 9000ft of climbing - first up Mt. Bogong's Staircase spur, and then up Mt. Nelse from the Big River, and finally the long haul up Mt. Loch from Dibbin's Hut. This latter section was described by Danny as the "red zone", because it's about here that exhaustion is likely to set in. Danny said he had been surprized when he found he had slept in on the morning of the record run, but realized later it was the best thing that could have happened. "It's almost as if someone up there said, 'Righto, you're going to get a good night's sleep!", he said. "And it was well worth it too, because seeing the sunrise while I was going up the Staircase was really beautiful."

(The same man won this years Bogong Conquestathon on record time)

CONSERVATION

There is a General Meeting 25/11/75 at 7.30pm at ACF, 206 Clarendon St., East Melbourne. One thing sure to be discussed will be the proposal to build an airstrip at Bond Bay in SW Tasmania.

Following are extracts from various Tasmanian newspapers about the matter:

The State Government was reducing the planned South West Inquiry to a "farcical and empty political charade" by failing to curb continuing development in the South West until after the inquiry, it was claime yesterday.

"Indeed it seems quite likely that the construction of this airstrip represents a clandestine foundation for yet another grab by the Hydro-Electric Commission at a very valuable area of the South West, te Davey River." The State Government's cynical disregard of the need to preserve the status quo in the South West and not pre-empt the findings of the inquiry, was exemplified by continued forestry operations in the Picton, Weld and Catamaran river valleys, and hydro-electric investigation of major rivers in the western wilderness."

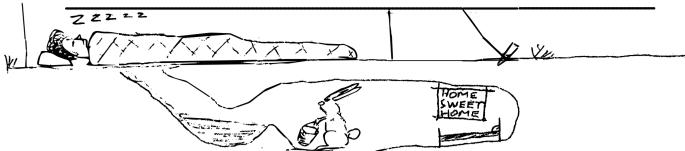

Part of a letter from a reader:

I think this is the greatest effort towards tourism for some time. It makes the South West accessible to far more people and with another airstrip proposed near the Lune River, it should make it financially possible for all people to afford a day trip to the South West.

The Government's intention to fund the clearing of the strip appeared to conflict with a statement made by the Premier, Mr. Neilson in May, the Federation's president, Mr. P.S. Witham, said yesterday.

Mr. Witham said there were only two explanations for this apparent conflict. "Either the Government has made a mistake with this year's Budget or the Premier has been insincere in his May 28 statement.

Mr. Kieran (of the SW Action Committee) said one airstrip already existed in the Pt. Davey area, and piecemeal development such as a further airstrip at Bond Bay was a completely unwarranted occurrence in a delicate area of the St. where years

HOW THE HELL DO I GET RID OF ALL THIS WATER WITH THAT GREAT OBSTRUCTIONIST IN THE ROAD?

The News Convenor cannot organise trips - the rain was coming down (not too good for canoeing), and Saturday mornings arrival at the chosen campsite was greeted by the Caretaker of the Establishment abandoning the place in the face of rising water from the Goulburn River. However, some good did come of it all, it was agreed to adjourn to Chateau Tahbilk to think about things. Fortunately, John Purblick 'a part owner) took pity on the party (they did buy a large amount of his product!) and offered his shearing shed as headquarters for the weekend. (The next barndance should be held there - it's bigger than Badger Creek Hall) So the intrepid canoeists shared quarters with three pigs and other assorted creatures and thought it wonderful instead of tiny, wet tents in the rain.

For FUN, see if you can pair the following with the correct partners!

Otto C Ruth Bob S Helen Alex S Marian Julie, Ann, Mary, Bronwyn etc Rod M Ken M Verle Ann Geoff C Pauline Geoff M Margaret John F Pam Stan A Sylvia

A recent trip to the Snowy Mountains saw Ken again carrying his pack and someone elses because it was heavy enough to cause her to lag considerably behind the rest of the party. Yet the same person considers it an absolute necessity to have in her pack make-up, aerosols and other assorted junk.

The Cup day walkers were almost swearing at Alex S when it became obvious that he ha' ordered the van for 9.15am instead of the intended time of 8.30am. However, many thanks for his actions went up when a violent rain storm hit about 15 minutes before the van arrived at its destination and it was realised that had the van been on time the party would have been a mile along the clifftops and no shelter whatever. Thanks Alex!
